

My Erasmus Experience

During my Erasmus exchange semester at Silesian University of Technology in Gliwice, Poland, I had the opportunity to immerse myself in a new culture and academic environment. I took classes in my field of study, as well as some courses that were unique to the Polish university system. This helped me to expand my knowledge and understanding of the subject matter and to approach it from different perspectives. The professors at the university were incredibly knowledgeable and passionate about their subjects, which made the classes engaging and inspiring.

One of the most valuable aspects of the experience was the opportunity to make friends with students from all over Europe. I met people from different backgrounds and cultures, and had the chance to learn about their customs, traditions, and ways of thinking. This helped me to broaden my perspective and become more open-minded. Additionally, I had to communicate with them in English, which improved my language skills, including my fluency, comprehension, and grammar.

Poland itself was charming and welcoming, with a rich history and a growing tech industry. I was surprised to find that many of the locals spoke English, which made it easy to communicate and explore the country. The experience of living in a different country also helped me to become more independent and responsible as I had to navigate daily life on my own.

Overall, my Erasmus exchange semester at Silesian University of Technology was a valuable and enriching experience. Not only did it help me to expand my knowledge and understanding of my field of study, but it also helped me to develop my soft skills, such as intercultural communication, adaptability, language skills, and independence. I would highly recommend this experience to anyone considering an exchange semester, as it will be a life-changing opportunity.

Sincerely,
